Read the following information carefully and answer the given questions.

The Mumbai Police have come up with a unique initiative, where traffic lights stay red if the noise level is above 85 decibels. This is to make motorists stop honking unnecessarily at traffic junctions. But Mumbai is not the noisiest city in the country. That position is occupied by Chennai, according to a recent study by the Central Pollution Control Board. Chennai has a daytime average noise level of 67.8 decibels, much higher than the accepted standard of 55 decibels. Not just Chennai, almost every city in India has recorded noise levels way higher than what is considered acceptable. The primary reason is the lack of focus. While authorities and environmentalists have dedicated their efforts in dealing with air and water pollution, but little has been done for noise, at least in India.

The Noise Pollution (Regulation and Control) Rules, 2000 provide a road map for noise control, but seldom are its provisions put to use. Not just that, considering the change in the country's technological and transportation landscape, the rules are proving to be largely inadequate. The rules ban honking in silence zones—though the ban is seldom enforced—they do not put any restrictions on the type of horn used in vehicles. Realizing the shortcoming, the CPCB in 2017 decided to ban musical, multi-toned and pressure horns in metro cities. This is also barely implemented. While air horns and pipe horns are banned from use, they are openly sold in auto shops across cities.

In comparison, developed nations have prescribed standards for horns in vehicles and rules for when drivers can honk. "A horn should not be sounded when stationary on a road at any time, other than at times of danger due to another vehicle on or near the road. A horn should not be used on a moving vehicle on a restricted road (one that has street lights and a 30mph limit) between the times of 11:30 pm and 7:00 am," says the UK law. What India needs more than ranking cities in terms of noise is a comprehensive policy to help authorities deal with the menace before it gets out of hand, as is the case with air and water.

Read the following information carefully and answer the given questions.

Sweat is produced largely by two types of glands: eccrine and apocrine. The former covers most of the body and acts as a cooling system - during physical exertion, sweat evaporates from the skin and helps maintain healthy body temperature. The apocrine glands, on the other hand, are present where there is a large number of hair follicles, like the genitals and underarms. Unlike eccrine glands, which open directly on the surface of the skin, apocrine glands open into the hair follicle which leads to the surface of the skin. They only start working after the onset of puberty, which is why body odour is first noticed then.

Sweat is odourless until bacteria interact with it and produce foul-smelling chemicals called thioalcohol. The sweat produced by apocrine glands is richer in protein, which can be easily broken down by bacteria. It is also produced in a warm, moist, and dark environment - ideal breeding conditions for bacteria.

While body odour is not usually a cause for concern, it can be a consequence of (A)_____ health issues. An overactive thyroid gland can cause excessive sweating, whereas liver disease, kidney disease and diabetes change the composition of sweat and alter the smell. Hyperhidrosis, a condition in which one sweats excessively from the armpits, hands and feet, is also diagnosed by a professional and there are several treatments available to manage it.

Read the following information carefully and answer the given questions.

As humans we really don't think that psychologically, birds are capable of the same mental tasks that other mammals are, and much more specifically, some of them are in the rarest of company with us, they are near-sapient, just like our close relatives.

Birds have been shown in previous studies to possess a range of skills such as complex social reasoning, an ability to problem solve and some have even demonstrated the capability to craft and use tools. Both birds and mammals are warm-blooded, which means they can maintain a constant body temperature and do not need to rely on an external heat source to stay warm. This similarity lends itself to several other commonalities, such as similar caloric requirements by weight and the ability to remain active in colder temperatures. Cold-blooded animals do not have to eat as much, but they also cannot survive colder temperatures.

Birds require a lot of energy in order to fly. This also necessitates a circulatory system that is both efficient and effective, so they have evolved a four-chambered heart with two atria and two ventricles, just like mammals.

The blood of birds and mammals contains both red and white blood cells, called erythrocytes and leukocytes respectively. The red blood cells in both classes of animals contain haemoglobin. Another similarity between birds and mammals is that both classes care for their young after they're hatched or born. Female mammals feed their young by lactating, while birds feed their young beak to beak.

Read the following information carefully and answer the given questions.

specifically, some of them are in the rarest of company with us, they are near-sapient, just like our close relatives.

Birds have been shown in previous studies to possess a range of skills such as complex social reasoning, an ability to problem solve and some have even demonstrated the capability to craft and use tools. Both birds and mammals are warm-blooded, which means they can maintain a constant body temperature and do not need to rely on an external heat source to stay warm. This similarity lends itself to several other commonalities, such as similar caloric requirements by weight and the ability to remain active in colder temperatures. Cold-blooded animals do not have to eat as much, but they also cannot survive colder temperatures.
